

Let Our Experience Work For You

We pay fully as much, if not more attention to the buying end of our business as to the selling.

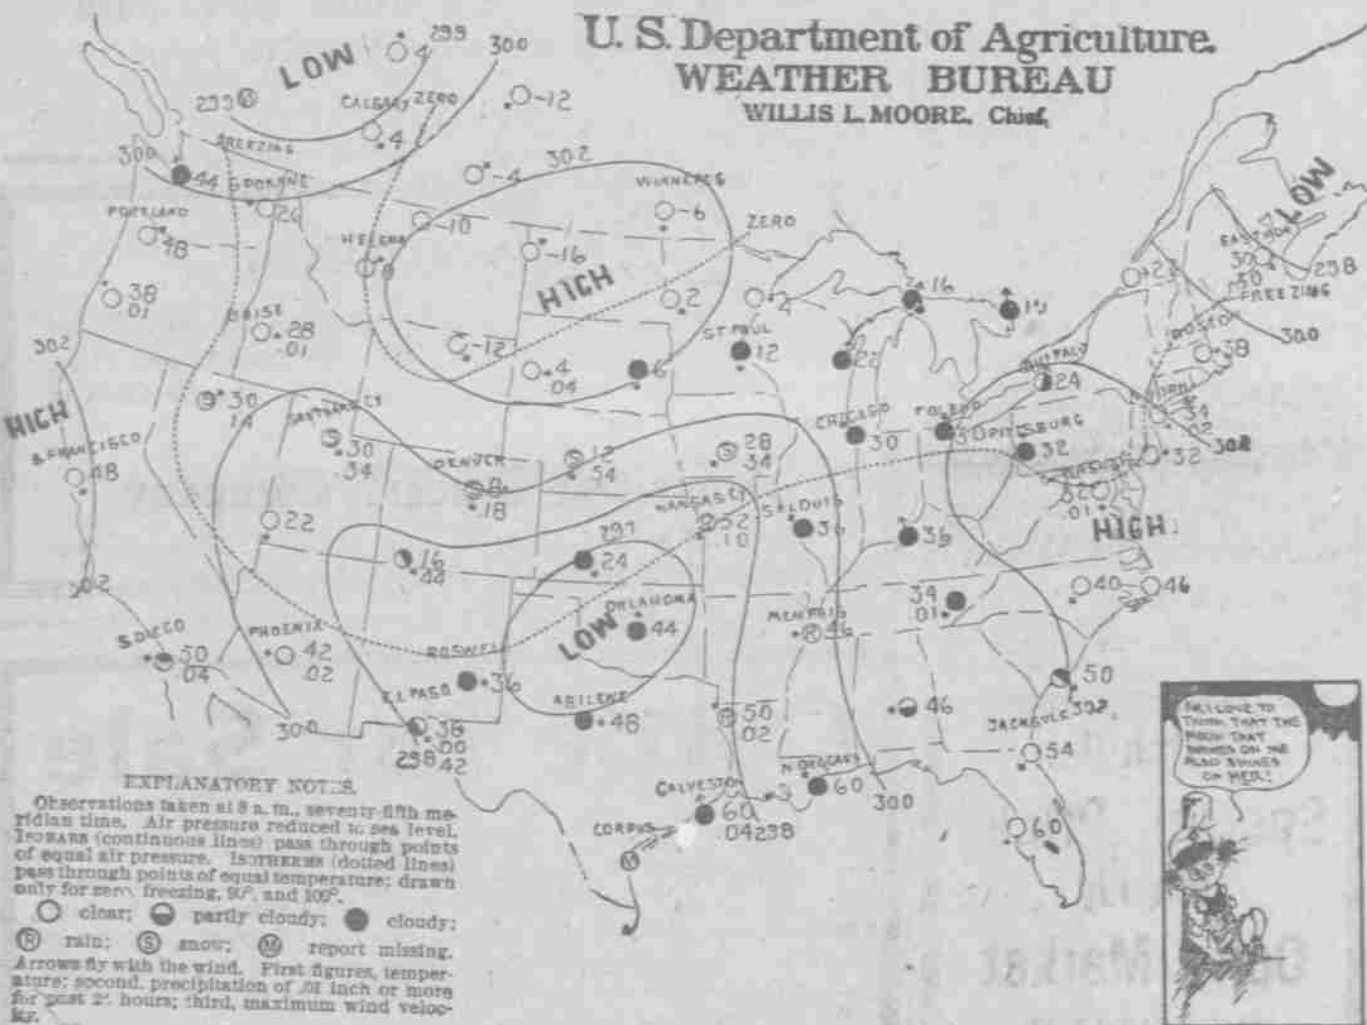

No article comes into our store until it has been carefully considered, and found to be well worth the price.

Thus our experience works to your advantage and it only remains for you to select such goods as appeal to your taste.

Is it not reasonable to assume that we are better able to judge values than the casual buyer? Is it not policy to take advantage of our experience?

MISSOURI COMMISSIONER PRAISES EL PASO PUSH.
Judge Joseph E. Black, one of the commissioners who will select the site for the Missouri building at the Pan-American-Pacific exhibition, spent Wednesday and a part of Thursday in El Paso as the guest of A. W. Reeves, traffic manager of the chamber of commerce, at the Hotel Linden. He departed Thursday for San Francisco, where he will meet the other Missouri commissioners. During his stay in El Paso he visited many points of interest and soon became enthusiastic over the push and progress of the southwestern metropolis.

BRAIN-BESPATTERED EXPRESS CAR, IN WHICH ROBBERS MET DEATH, IS HERE

Express Messenger, Hero of the G. H. Holdup, Remains at Sanderson, However, For the Inquest—Passengers and Trainmen Pay Tribute to His Bravery
Two Messengers in Car at Time of Holdup.

A brain-spattered mailer, a blood-covered corner of an express car and two bullet holes in the end door of the car were the gruesome reminders of the heroic work done by express messenger David Trousdale when train robbers held up the Sunset limited train No. 9 near Eldridge, Wednesday morning. The express messenger left the train at Sanderson to testify at the coroner's inquest and give the officers there all the information he had regarding the two dead men in order that their identity might be established. The baggage car in which the battle occurred was brought to El Paso by J. K. Reagen, who was with Trousdale when the holdup occurred. Reagen is a big, husky chap from Beaumont, who has been running out of San Antonio for the express company and who was on the limited leaving there Tuesday morning. While Reagen gives Trousdale all the credit for his heroic work in killing the two men, he had a part in the affair which deserves consideration.

Reagen Tells of Holdup.
Reagen says that he and Trousdale were working in the car when the train stopped at the iron bridge near Eldridge. A fire had been built by the bandits near the track and it is believed that a third robber, who was holding their horses, escaped into the hills after he heard the shots fired. "The first we knew of the trouble was when the engineer knocked on the right hand door of our car and we were ordered to get out and go up to the engine," Reagen said when he arrived in the union station Wednesday afternoon.

Robbers Had Rifles.
"We were covered with rifles by the two men, who had their heads covered with black cloths, and who made us climb on the engine while one of them poked his gun in the porter's nose and made him uncouple the remainder of the train," continued Reagen. "We then ran about two miles west with the men covering the engineer to make him stop. When we stopped, one of the men made us go into the mail car and left the sacks of mail so that they could not get the valuable packages out. The man told us that he was going to make us help him get the stuff across the Mexican line. He made mail clerk Banks assist in opening the mail, although none of it was carried out of the car.

Robber Goes Ahead.
"From the mail car he made us go into our own car. Like a fool he walked in front of us and Trousdale was ahead of me. There was a wooden fence in the corner of the car to the right of the end door through which we entered. It is used to break up ice for ice creamers in transit. Trousdale saw it and while the man had his back to him he cracked him one with it over the head and proceeded to beat his brains out and spill them over the car floor.

Deeds Dozen Deadly Blows.
"The first blow he hit the man he staggered to the floor and tried to get up, but Trousdale was too quick for him and was on top of him and hammering away at his head with the

Exposition of Waists For Spring 1912 With Tempting Prices

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY—on the second floor—you will find an exposition of the new Waists for Spring 1912. After a two years conflict with other garments which endeavored to supplant it, the Separate Waist has finally triumphed and returns again this season with increased vigor and with added beauty and charm.

This exposition will rank among the most important on the mercantile calendar. Nearly three thousand Waists will be displayed—all strictly this season's styles and of the very best designed for spring wear.

The entire center aisle on the second floor will be given over to the enormous display. Several hundred different models will be shown. All crisp, fresh, new merchandise. We want you to examine the Waists from every angle; look into every detail searching, critically, carefully. Though the prices are lowered—you'll find nothing lacking in the quality, the workmanship or the style. The exposition is planned as near to perfection as four months of preparation and the skill of a quartette of expert buyers have been able to do it. We take pleasure and pride in presenting you these peerless offerings.
